DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

It is ironic to see the quaint farmhouse still standing on a rolling patch of land in this heavily-developed area, located less than a mile from Washington, D.C. The house sits on a small knoll, and faces east toward Rte. 210. It has a main (east) three-bay facade, with a central door. A one-story, open-porch crosses the front. The porch has a railing and bracketed, turned posts. There are stove chimneys within each end wall. Windows on the front have 2/2 sash, but those in the ends are 6/6. There are several later additions to the rear. The house is covered with fake-brick asphalt siding. An old barn/stable sits just west of the house.

 STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

A quaint, small farm that has somehow temporarily escaped high-rise development. It was probably built about the 1880's, and it has been owned by the Talbert family continuously since that time.
